

China Population and Development Studies (CPDS) welcomes submissions to the journal

CPDS is the flagship journal of the China Population Association, hosted by the China Population and Development Research Center under the National Health Commission of China. Collaborating with Springer Nature since 2018, this quarterly journal encompasses a wide variety of latest research to population and development issues in China including original articles, policy commentaries, survey reports, and comparative studies. We follow a double-blind peer review procedure.

To provide an international platform for discussions on population and development issues, we welcome submissions from broad range of population-related fields, such as statistical demography, population policy, population and health, internal and international migration, ageing, population dynamics, fertility and fertility preference, economic and social demography, research methodology, as well as international comparative studies in population and development.

To access the journal: <http://springer.com/journal/42379>

To submit a manuscript: <http://www.editorialmanager.com/cpds/default.aspx>

Twitter: @CPDS Journal